

THE SHORT KING SERIES
BOOK SEVEN · THE FINAL BOOK

Swipe Right on Yourself

The Short King's Complete Dating Profile Overhaul

1	2	3	4	5
SOCIAL PROOF Candid. Real energy.	FULL BODY Eye level or below.	LIFESTYLE Specific & real.	CLOSE-UP Natural light.	WILDCARD Makes her ask.

Messages

okay your Tokyo prompt got me. what happened

Missed my train, phone dead, wrong neighborhood. Best night of the trip.

okay I need the full story

Thursday. Coffee. I'll tell you in person.

...yeah okay. Thursday works.

Stop Getting Filtered Out Before She Ever Reads a Word.

The Short King Coaching

WHO THIS IS FOR

"Your in-person game is strong. Your profile is the reason she never sees it. This book fixes that."

This book is for the man who knows he's better in person than on paper. The one whose matches don't reflect what he actually brings to a real interaction. The one who gets filtered out by height before his personality, humor, or presence ever enters the equation.

Dating apps are the most height-filtered environment in modern dating. They strip away everything that makes a shorter man compelling in person and replace it with a photograph and a number. Most shorter men accept this as a fixed disadvantage and either avoid apps entirely or use them with low expectations. Both are mistakes. The profile is a system. Systems can be built well or built poorly. This book builds it well.

A Note on Apps vs In-Person

Apps are a tool, not the whole game. The in-person approach system from Book Five will always produce higher quality outcomes for shorter men because it puts your full presence in front of her rather than a filtered digital version. Use both. Optimize both. Don't rely exclusively on either. This book handles everything that happens before the match. Book One covers the text game that follows it.

INTRODUCTION

The Swipe Is a Decision Made in Two Seconds

She doesn't read your profile and then decide. She decides in approximately two seconds and then, if the answer is yes, she reads your profile to confirm it. The swipe decision is almost entirely based on the first photo and happens through the same thin-slicing mechanism that governs all rapid social judgments: a fast, largely unconscious assessment of attractiveness, social status, and energy from a single image.

For shorter men, this two-second window is where the height disadvantage is most concentrated. She doesn't know your height from the photo. She knows whether the photo communicates confidence, warmth, and social status. A shorter man whose first photo communicates all three will get swiped right on at a rate that has nothing to do with his height.

The good news is that photographs can be taken deliberately. The composition, the environment, the expression, the framing, the moment chosen — all of it is within your control and all of it shapes the impression that photo makes in two seconds.

"The profile doesn't need to show everything you are. It needs to make her curious enough to find out."

The Psychology of the Swipe

How She Actually Decides and What Triggers a Yes

The halo effect is the cognitive bias by which a single strongly positive impression in one dimension causes the brain to assume positive qualities across all other dimensions. In dating app terms: a first photo that generates genuine attraction creates a positive filter through which every subsequent piece of information in the profile is read. The reverse is equally true.

This means the work of a dating profile is not distributed evenly across its elements. Approximately 70 percent of the work is done by the first photo. The bio and subsequent photos operate as confirmation or disconfirmation of the impression the first photo already established. Get the first photo right and every other element works with you. Get it wrong and nothing else saves you.

What a High-Converting First Photo Communicates

SOCIAL PROOF

Are other people engaged with this man? Is he at an event, in a social context, clearly at ease in a group? Social proof triggers the inference that others have already evaluated him positively, which shortcuts her own evaluation in his favor.

PHYSICAL EASE

Is he comfortable in his body? Is the posture open and grounded or closed and tense? A photograph of a man who looks at ease reads as confident before any other information is available.

ENVIRONMENT

Where is he? An interesting or high-quality environment elevates the impression of the man within it through context association. A plain wall or a cluttered bedroom does the opposite.

EXPRESSION

Is his expression genuine? The same distinction between a real smile and a social smile that applies in person applies in photographs. A genuine expression conveys warmth and confidence.

FRAME

Is the photo taken from a perspective that shows him favorably? Camera angle, composition, and distance all affect how the person in the photo reads. This is the difference between a photo that does the job and one that doesn't.

◆ CASE STUDY: REAL CASE: THE PHOTO OVERHAUL

A client at 5'5" came to me with a profile that had generated almost no matches in four months. His first photo was a selfie taken in his car, slight downward angle, indoor lighting, no context. He was not unattractive. The photo communicated nothing. We retook his photos over one afternoon in three locations with a photographer friend. His first photo became a candid shot from a social event: laughing with people around him, good natural light, his posture relaxed and open. His match rate in the first week after the new photos went up by over 300 percent. Same man. Same height. Different photograph.

■ YOUR MOVE

Pull up your current first photo right now and ask five questions: Does it show social proof? Is my posture open and relaxed? Is the environment interesting? Is my expression genuine? Is the framing flattering? If the answer to any of these is no, that photo needs to be replaced. Schedule a photo session this week — not next month.

The Photography System

Building a Five-Photo Lineup That Converts

Most men have no system for their dating profile photos. They upload whatever looks decent from their camera roll — whatever happened to be taken without any thought for the impression it creates. The result is a random collection of images that communicates nothing coherent about who they are.

A well-built photo lineup tells a story. Each photo adds a new dimension to the impression established by the first. By the time she has seen all five, she should have a clear sense of who you are, what your life looks like, and why spending time with you would be interesting. All without a word of text.

The Five-Photo Blueprint

PHOTO 1 — SOCIAL PROOF

You in a real social situation with genuine energy around you. Not posing — caught in a moment of genuine engagement. This photo does 70% of the conversion work. It must be taken by someone else, not a selfie, not staged. You are the most visually interesting person in the frame.

PHOTO 2 — FULL BODY

One full-length photo. Profiles with no full body shot are associated in the female swiping brain with having something to hide. A confident full-body shot at a natural, flattering angle removes that inference. Dress the same way you would on a first date. Camera at eye level or slightly below.

PHOTO 3 —
INTEREST OR LIFESTYLE

You doing something you actually do. A sport, a hobby, a travel photo from somewhere specific and interesting. This gives her something concrete to reference in an opener. Specific beats generic every time.

PHOTO 4 —
CLOSE-UP

A good close-up where your face is the entire frame. Natural light. Genuine expression. This is the photo she returns to after swiping right — she wants to confirm the face she found attractive in photo 1 is consistently attractive.

PHOTO 5 —
THE WILDCARD

The photo that makes her curious in a way none of the others do. Slightly unexpected, shows a side of you that contradicts assumptions, or simply compelling in a way that's hard to categorize. If you have a photo that has ever made someone say 'what is that about' — that is your wildcard.

Photography Angles for Shorter Men

Camera angle is the most controllable variable in how height is perceived in a photograph. A camera positioned at or slightly below eye level makes the subject look taller and more commanding. A camera positioned above eye level — the selfie default — creates a visual shortening effect and communicates the kind of self-consciousness that undermines the whole enterprise.

Avoid group photos where you are visibly the shortest person in the frame. Not because you should be ashamed of your height — but because the comparison activates her height-filtering instinct in a way that a solo photo or a well-selected group photo does not.

PHOTO QUALITY CHECKLIST

- ✓ Photo 1: Taken by someone else, not a selfie
- ✓ Photo 1: Genuine expression, real social energy
- ✓ Photo 1: Natural or warm indoor lighting
- ✓ Photo 2: Camera at eye level or slightly below
- ✓ Photo 2: Outfit you'd wear on a first date
- ✓ Photos 3–5: Each adds new information not in previous photos

✗ No two photos in the same outfit

✗ No more than one gym or workout photo

✗ No bathroom mirror selfies

✗ No photos where you are visibly the shortest person in the frame

◆ CASE STUDY: COMPOSITE — ONE AFTERNOON VS ONE HOUR

Two clients rebuilt their profiles the same week. The first spent two hours retaking photos alone with his phone: same apartment, similar lighting, slightly different expressions. His match rate improved marginally. The second booked one afternoon with a friend who had a decent camera, went to three different locations, and took 200 photos over four hours. From those 200 he selected five that each told a different part of his story. His match rate improved by over 400 percent in two weeks. Photo quality is not about filters or editing. It is about deliberate variety, the right angle, and images taken by someone else in real-world contexts. One good afternoon of photos changes your profile entirely.

■ YOUR MOVE

Plan a photo session in the next seven days. Pick three different locations that represent your actual life. Bring someone with a decent camera or a newer phone. Take at least 50 shots across the locations. You need five final photos — getting to five good ones from 50 attempts is realistic. Getting there from 5 attempts is not.

The Height Question

Disclosure, Strategy, and the Preemptive Frame

Height on a dating profile is the question every shorter man loses sleep over. Do you list it and watch the filters eliminate you? Do you leave it blank and get accused of hiding something? Do you address it in your bio and risk sounding defensive? There is a right answer. It is not the one most men choose.

Women who filter by height on dating apps are operating on a heuristic, not a hard preference. Height has been culturally associated with masculine desirability, so the brain uses it as a proxy for confidence, social status, and physical presence. What she actually wants is those underlying qualities. Height is just the fastest available signal for them.

Your job is not to hide your height or to argue with the heuristic. Your job is to make the heuristic irrelevant by demonstrating the underlying qualities so clearly that height stops being the question.

The Height Disclosure Decision Tree

The Preemptive Frame Strategy

The most effective height strategy for shorter men who want to address it directly: you bring up your height before she can use it against you, in a way that demonstrates complete comfort with it, and then immediately pivot to something that makes her curious about you. The tone is everything — it only works when it reads as genuinely unbothered.

SIMPLE AND DIRECT

"Yes, I'm 5'6". I've had a great life anyway."

WITH PIVOT

"5'6" and completely at peace with it. If that's a dealbreaker, no hard feelings. If not, let's find out if we're actually compatible."

WITH IDENTITY

"Short King energy. 5'5". Ask me about [specific interesting thing] and we'll get along fine."

The pivot after the height mention is critical — whatever follows must immediately redirect her attention.

DISARMING

"I'm 5'7". I mention it so we can skip the awkward moment and get to the part where you decide you don't care."

◆ CASE STUDY: REAL CASE: THE PREEMPTIVE FRAME IN ACTION

A client at 5'5" had been leaving his height blank for two years. He was getting matches but felt anxious about the height conversation every time and would preemptively over-explain in his openers. We wrote a single height line for his bio: '5'5". Fully at peace with it. Ask me where I'd take you on a first date and we'll take it from there.' His matches decreased slightly in the first week. His conversion rate from match to date increased by 60 percent over the following month. The women who matched after the new bio were women who had already decided the height was not an issue before the first message. He stopped having the anxious height conversation entirely. The preemptive frame had done the work so he didn't have to.

■ YOUR MOVE

Decide your height disclosure strategy right now based on the decision tree above. If you're using the preemptive frame, write three versions of your height line and read each one out loud. The right one should sound like you genuinely don't care. If any version sounds defensive when you say it out loud, rewrite it until it doesn't.

The Bio and Prompt System

Words That Make Her Curious

After the photos create the impression, the bio has one job: make her curious enough to swipe right or send the first message. Not describe you comprehensively. Not list your interests. Not demonstrate your worthiness as a long-term partner. Make her curious. That's it.

Most dating bios fail because they are written to inform rather than to intrigue. A bio that tells her everything she needs to know gives her brain no open loops to resolve. A bio that tells her just enough to want more creates the pull that makes her reach out. The curiosity gap — the psychological discomfort created by partial information — is one of the most powerful motivators of human attention. A well-written bio weaponizes it.

The Four Bio Archetypes That Work

SPECIFIC AND INTERESTING

"I can recommend a good restaurant in most major cities, cook three things exceptionally well, and have strong opinions about the correct way to spend a Sunday. Probably compatible with someone who has equally strong opinions about things that don't technically matter."

Replace generic statements with hyper-specific details. Not 'I love to travel' but something real that no one else would write.

CONFIDENT AND SLIGHTLY PROVOCATIVE

"I have strong opinions about things that do not technically matter. This is either a warning or a selling point depending on who you are."

A genuine opinion stated with confidence. Creates a reaction — and a reaction means she is thinking about you.

SELF-AWARE AND FUNNY

"5'6". Great at parallel parking. Mediocre at keeping plants alive. Exceptional at ordering for the table. Priorities are clear."

Humor that demonstrates self-awareness rather than performing for approval. Signals you see yourself clearly and are comfortable enough to joke about it.

QUESTION BAIT

"I turned down a job in Tokyo three years ago. Still not sure if that was the right call."

End with something specific that makes her want to ask a question. An unresolved story or specific claim that invites challenge. The open loop is your highest-converting bio element.

What to Eliminate From Your Bio Immediately

ELIMINATE THESE IMMEDIATELY

- ✗ "I'm told I'm funny" — any self-described personality trait. Show it, don't claim it.
- ✗ "Looking for someone who..." lists. They read as demands and create no curiosity.
- ✗ "Just ask" as the entire bio. Signals you couldn't think of anything interesting.
- ✗ Generic interests as nouns: food, travel, music, movies. Everyone likes these things.
- ✗ Any mention of what you don't want. Negativity filters out the wrong people and the right ones.
- ✗ Paragraph-length descriptions of your job or daily routine. She is not evaluating your CV.

High-Converting Prompt Responses

On Hinge, prompts are often where the actual match is won or lost. A great prompt response gets messaged more than a great photo in many cases because it gives her a specific, low-effort way to open a conversation. Every prompt response has one goal: give her a line she can respond to without having to think too hard.

HIGH-CONVERTING PROMPT RESPONSES

PROMPT: "I'm looking for..."

→ "Someone with opinions. About anything. Indecisiveness is the one thing I genuinely can't work with."

PROMPT: "The most spontaneous thing I've done..."

→ "Booked a flight at 11pm for 7am the next morning. Didn't tell anyone. Best weekend I've had in years."

PROMPT: "Unusual skills..."

→ "I can navigate almost any city without GPS. This skill is either impressive or irrelevant depending on whether you find getting lost romantic."

PROMPT: "Two truths and a lie..."

→ "I've cooked for 40 people. I once slept through an earthquake. I have a strong opinion about the correct milk-to-coffee ratio." [Leave the lie ambiguous. Let her ask.]

◆ CASE STUDY: COMPOSITE — THE BIO REWRITE

Two clients rewrote their bios the same week. The first rewrote from scratch with hyper-specific details and ended with the Tokyo question as his open loop. Within 48 hours, four women had messaged him first referencing the Tokyo line specifically. He had never received an unsolicited first message before the rewrite. The second client kept his old photos and only rewrote his bio. His matches increased by 80 percent. He told me he'd assumed photos were everything and the bio was secondary. The rewrite taught him that a strong photo gets the swipe — but a strong bio gets the message, and the message is the part that leads somewhere.

■ YOUR MOVE

Rewrite your bio today using one of the four archetypes. Write three versions and read each out loud. The right one sounds like you talking, not like a profile you crafted. Then end it with an open loop — something specific that makes her want to ask a question. That open loop is your highest-converting bio element.

Platform Selection and the Complete Profile Audit

Where to Play and How to Know Your Profile Is Ready

Not all dating apps are equal for shorter men. The platform you choose affects your match rate, the quality of matches, and the degree to which height filtering works against you. Choosing the right platform is a strategic decision, not an arbitrary one.

Platform Guide for Shorter Men

HINGE

BEST FOR

SHORTER MEN

The prompt system rewards personality and specificity in ways that level the field from pure visual comparison. Women are more likely to match based on what you wrote than on your photos alone. The comment feature means she can engage with a specific element of your profile before matching — filtering for women already interested in something about you beyond your height.

BUMBLE

STRONG SECOND

She messages first, which means your profile has to be compelling enough to warrant her composing an opener. The bar is higher but the women who do message are more invested from the start. Height filtering is present but the messaging requirement adds a second hurdle that filters more actively on personality than appearance alone.

TINDER

STRONG PHOTOS

REQUIRED

The most visually driven platform and the most aggressively height-filtered. Useful for volume, less useful for quality. Your first photo needs to do more work here than on any other platform because the swipe decision is almost entirely visual with less profile context available.

COFFEE

MEETS

BAGEL

WORTH TESTING

Slower pace, more intentional matches. Women who use this platform tend to read profiles more thoroughly before engaging. A strong bio performs better here than on faster-swipe platforms.

The Complete Profile Audit

Run this before your profile goes live. Every no is a fix that improves your match rate. Prioritize in order: photos first, bio second, platform third.

PHOTOGRAPHY AUDIT

- ✓ First photo taken by someone else, not a selfie
- ✓ First photo shows you in a social context with genuine energy
- ✓ Camera angle at eye level or below in all photos
- ✓ At least one full-body shot with flattering framing
- ✓ Five photos minimum, each showing a different context
- ✗ No two photos in the same outfit
- ✗ No bathroom mirror selfies
- ✗ No photos where you are visibly the shortest in the frame

BIO AUDIT

- ✓ Written in your actual voice, not a formal register
- ✓ At least one hyper-specific detail that distinguishes you
- ✓ Ends with an open loop that invites a question
- ✗ No generic interest nouns: food, travel, music, movies
- ✗ No self-described personality traits
- ✗ No negativity, complaints, or lists of what you don't want

PLATFORM AUDIT

- ✓ At least two platforms active simultaneously
- ✓ Hinge is one of them
- ✓ Prompts filled in on Hinge with question-bait responses
- ✓ Profile reviewed and refreshed at minimum every 30 days

The Testing Mindset

A dating profile is not a finished product. It is a hypothesis you are testing. When you make a change, give it two weeks before evaluating. If match rate increases, keep the change. If it stays flat or decreases, revert and try something else.

The men who get the most out of dating apps are not the men with the best natural profiles. They are the men who treat the profile as a system to optimize and run small tests consistently. Height does not determine your optimization ceiling. The willingness to test and adjust does.

◆ CASE STUDY: REAL CASE: WRONG PLATFORM, RIGHT PROFILE

A client had been on Tinder for two years with low match rates and low conversion to dates. We moved his primary effort to Hinge, rebuilt his photos over one weekend, rewrote his bio using the specific-and-interesting archetype, and wrote three prompt responses using the question-bait format. In month one on Hinge he received more first messages from women than he had in two years on Tinder. In month two he had four dates. By month three he was in a relationship with someone who had messaged him first referencing his Tokyo prompt. He told me the prompt response had taken him eight minutes to write. He'd spent two years on the wrong platform with a profile that communicated nothing. Eight minutes and a platform switch changed his dating life more than anything else he'd tried.

■ YOUR MOVE

Run the complete profile audit right now. Score each item yes or no. Every no is your next action item. Prioritize: photos first, bio second, platform third. Do not move to the bio until the photos are rebuilt. Do not move to the platform until the bio is done.

SWIPE RIGHT ON YOURSELF

Quick Reference

Screenshot this. Run the audit before your profile goes live.

1 SOCIAL PROOF Candid. Real energy.	2 FULL BODY Eye level or below.	3 LIFESTYLE Specific & real.	4 CLOSE-UP Natural light.	5 WILDCARD Makes her ask.
---	---	--	---	---

HEIGHT STRATEGY

- 5'8" and above: List your height. No strategy needed.
- Below 5'8", strong photos: Leave blank. Let photos do the work.
- Preemptive frame: Address in bio with total confidence. Pivot immediately to something interesting.

BIO RULES

- ✓ Hyper-specific over generic. Always.
- ✓ Show personality — don't describe it.
- ✓ End with an open loop that invites a question.
- ✗ No generic nouns: food, travel, music, movies.
- ✗ No self-described traits: 'I'm told I'm funny.'
- ✗ No negativity. No lists of what you don't want.

PLATFORM PRIORITY

- 1 Hinge: Best for shorter men. Prompts reward personality.
- 2 Bumble: Higher investment from women who match.
- 3 Tinder: Use with strong photos only. Most height-filtered.

THE TESTING MINDSET

- Treat every profile element as a hypothesis.
- Two weeks per change before evaluating.
- Keep what works. Revert what doesn't.
- Height doesn't determine your ceiling. Testing does.

PHOTO CHECKLIST (SHORT)

- ✓ Taken by someone else, not a selfie
- ✓ Social context with genuine energy
- ✓ Camera at eye level or below
- ✓ 5 photos, 5 different contexts, no repeating outfits
- ✗ No mirror selfies. No shortest-in-the-frame shots.

THE SERIES IS COMPLETE.

Now it's time to build.

You have everything now. All seven books. The full system.

BO

OK

1

She Replied. Now What? — The complete texting playbook

BO

OK

2

The First Date Blueprint — From hello to goodnight kiss

BO

OK

3

Unshakeable — The internal confidence system

BO

OK

4

The Presence Code — Non-verbal authority before you speak

BO

OK

5

Approach Like a King — Killing approach anxiety forever

BO

OK

6

The Attraction Conversation — Making her feel something every time

BO

OK

7

Swipe Right on Yourself — The complete profile overhaul

No part of this system requires you to be taller. Every part of it requires you to be better. And better, as every book in this series has shown, is something you build deliberately through specific practice applied consistently over time.

The man who completes this series and applies it is not the man who started it. Not because his height changed. Because everything else did.

"The Short King doesn't wait for the world to lower its standards. He raises his game until the standards become irrelevant."

Want direct coaching?

The books give you the complete framework. Coaching gives you someone in your corner applying it to your specific situation — reviewing your real profile, your real conversations, your real approaches, and accelerating your results with direct feedback on what is actually happening in your dating life right now. Reach out through the Short King Coaching platform.

The kingdom is yours. Go build it.